In an increasingly interconnected world, geopolitical instability has emerged as a defining challenge for businesses operating on the global stage. From trade tensions to regulatory shifts to regional conflicts and political polarization, companies face a complex web of risks that can impact their operations, reputation, and bottom line.

Half of companies have allocated more resources to managing geopolitical risks in the last five years, according to ACC's "Navigating Geopolitical Risk Survey," produced in partnership with Harvard Business School and the US Chamber of Commerce Foundation.
